

Background- Paraguay<sup>1</sup>

Paraguay is a landlocked country with a population of 6 million wedged between Argentina, Brazil and Bolivia, whose territory includes large swaths of swampland, subtropical forest, and “Chaco wilderness” made of savanna and scrubland. Much of the land is in the hands of a tiny elite and successive governments have been slow to implement land reform. It remains one of the region’s poorest countries, with over 40% of its people living in poverty.

Political unrest, corruption and chronic economic problems have plagued the country’s fragile democracy since it emerged from the 35-year dictatorship of the late General Alfredo Stroessner in 1989. Mistreatment of prisoners and the dispossession of indigenous peoples continues to be a problem.

Before independence, Paraguay was the subject of territorial struggles among indigenous and Spanish groups. Originally, Paraguay was the home of the Guaraní people, who defended their independent villages from incursions by the Inca Empire. In the 1530s, Spanish settlers arrived searching for gold, touching off power struggles between urban Spanish settlers, rural Jesuit missionaries, the Spanish kingdom, and neighboring countries. In the early 1810s, Paraguay rejected competing territorial bids by Argentina and Brazil and declared its independence from Spain.

Following independence, Paraguay was ruled by a series of dictators who drove the country into the devastating War of the Triple Alliance against three of its neighbors. Paraguay’s first dictator, José Gaspar Rodríguez de Francia (“El Supremo”) isolated the country and brutally repressed potential rivals, stripping Spanish elites of wealth and power and executing over 68 Guaraní elites suspected of participating in a coup attempt. Nevertheless, Francia left Paraguay relatively prosperous and his successor, dictator Carlos Antonio López, increased international trade and built a strong military to defend Paraguay from incursions by Argentina, Brazil, Britain, and the US. However, López unwisely passed power on to his ambitious son, Francisco Solano López. Emboldened by the military his father had built, Solano López simultaneously declared war on Brazil, Argentina, and Uruguay, who joined together to invade Paraguay in the War of the Triple Alliance. During a panicked retreat, Solano López executed hundreds of his own citizens, including two of his brothers, before dying in combat himself. The war killed over half of Paraguay’s population before it finally ended in 1870.

Miraculously, Paraguay emerged from the war as a democracy with largely intact borders. Brazil’s and Argentina’s mutual animosity forced both to withdraw and enabled Paraguay to keep much of its land and begin again under a democratic constitution. For over 60 years, Paraguay was a democracy with two competing political parties: the Colorados and the Liberals.

However, continuing conflict over Paraguay’s Chaco region lead to a new war and a spiral back into dictatorship. The Chaco region is located on Paraguay’s north western border with Bolivia and is primarily populated by Guaraní people. To finance its debts from the War of the Triple

---

<sup>1</sup> Caitlin Hunter, Author, Foreign and International Law Librarian at Loyola Law School; Erin Gonzalez, Chief IACHR Editor; Cesare Romano, Faculty Advisor

Alliance, Paraguay sold Guaraní land in Chaco to private investors. At the same time, Bolivia also began sending settlers and soldiers into Chaco, hoping to replace land Bolivia had lost to Peru in its own War of the Pacific. In 1932, Bolivia invaded Chaco, sparking a 1932-1935 war that killed 100,000 Paraguayans. In the chaos following the Chaco War, a series of generals staged repeated coups, deteriorating into a full blown civil war in 1947. Finally, in 1954, the Colorado party and the military staged a successful coup giving power to General Alfredo Stroessner.

From 1954 to 1989, General Stroessner ruled Paraguay as its president and de facto dictator. Economically, Stroessner championed the construction of the Itaipú hydroelectric dam, which generated financial gains but also displaced 10,000 families, mostly indigenous. Politically, Stroessner collaborated with other right wing dictators in Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Chile as part of Operation Condor, an organized effort to arrest and disappear left wing dissidents.<sup>2</sup> Stroessner repeatedly tortured both Liberal leaders and moderate members of his own Colorado party, such as Dr. Agustín Goiburú Giménez. In the 1970s, Dr. Giménez fled to Argentina but the Argentinian military kidnapped him and returned him to Paraguay, where he was tortured and murdered.<sup>3</sup> Stroessner's power was backed by a large military, maintained by forcibly conscripting boys as young as 12 years old. One conscript, 15 year old Gerardo Vargas Areco, was tortured and shot to death in January 1989 after he attempted to flee the draft.<sup>4</sup> Finally, in February 1989, Stroessner was overthrown by his own second in command General Andrés Rodríguez Pedotti.

Since 1989, Paraguay has remained a democracy, but it is a fragile one. Under General Pedotti, Paraguay recognized the Inter-American Court of Human Rights' competence and loosened restrictions on the press and competing political parties. However, the Paraguayan government remained tied to Stroessner and the military and reluctant to hear criticism. In 1993, General Lino Oviedo backed the presidential candidacy of Colorado politician Juan Carlos Wasmosy. The rival presidential candidate, Ricardo Nicolás Canese Krivoshein, criticized Wasmosy's ties to Stroessner and involvement with the Itaipú power plant. After Wasmosy won the election, a court convicted Canese of criminal slander, fined him $8,970, sentenced him to four months imprisonment, and prohibited him from leaving the country.<sup>5</sup> Wasmosy also quickly fell out with Oveido, prompting Oveido to attempt a coup in 1996 and then run against Wasmosy for president in 1998. During the 1998 presidential campaign, Wasmosy had Oveido arrested for his role in the 1996 coup, then lost anyway to Oveido's vice presidential candidate, Raúl Cubas Grau. Cubas freed Oveido but both Oveido and Cubas were forced to flee the country in 1999 after Oveido was implicated in the assassination of Vice President Luís María Argaña and the shootings of peaceful demonstrators. Since 1999, Paraguay has been governed by a series of presidents who have been democratically elected but beset by corruption accusations and personal scandals.

---

<sup>2</sup> Diana Jean Schemo, Stroessner, Paraguay's Enduring Dictator, Dies, N.Y. TIMES (Aug. 16, 2006), http://www.nytimes.com/2006/08/16/world/americas/16cnd-stroessner.html?pagewanted=all&\_r=0

<sup>3</sup> Goiburú et al. v. Paraguay, Merits, Reparations, and Costs, Judgment, Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (ser. C) No. 153 (Sept. 22, 2006), <https://iachr.ils.edu/cases/goibur%C3%BA-et-al-v-paraguay>.

<sup>4</sup> Vargas Areco v. Paraguay, Merits, Reparations and Costs, Judgment, Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (ser. C) No. 155 (Sept. 26, 2006), <https://iachr.ils.edu/cases/vargas-areco-v-paraguay>.

<sup>5</sup> Ricardo Canese v. Paraguay, Merits, Reparations and Costs, Judgment, Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (ser. C) No. 111 (Aug. 31, 2004), <https://iachr.ils.edu/cases/ricardo-canese-v-paraguay>.

Paraguay's prison system is also deeply troubled. In 1996, human rights groups filed a petition with the IACHR alleging that children held at the Panchito López Juvenile Reeducation Institute suffered from overcrowding, inadequate facilities, beatings, and sexual assault. While the IACHR's final decision was pending, three electrical fires and a riot broke out, two children were stabbed, and two children were shot.<sup>6</sup> Despite the IACHR's order to improve prison conditions, Paraguay's prisons remain overcrowded and plagued by violence and fire, including a 2016 fire that killed six inmates and a guard.<sup>7</sup>

Finally, Paraguay struggles with tensions over indigenous land ownership that date back to the War of the Triple Alliance and the Chaco War. Many Guaraní people in Chaco were displaced when Paraguay sold their lands to private investors to finance the War of the Triple Alliance. Many more were displaced by fighting between Paraguay and Bolivia during the Chaco War. Today, many indigenous communities in Chaco lack food, running water, medical care, and a place to live. Landowners and the government have sought court orders to force indigenous communities off private land and public roads. In turn, multiple indigenous communities have sought the return of their land before Paraguay's courts and the IACHR.<sup>8</sup> To comply with an IACHR order, the Paraguayan government has begun purchasing land for indigenous communities but it simultaneously continues to collaborate with rural landowners in forcibly removing indigenous people from their lands and burning their homes, schools, and crops.<sup>9</sup>

More information

Additional background was provided by the sources below.

For historical background, see the Encyclopedia Britannica and BBC Country Profiles.

For an overview of the current human rights situation, see the U.S. Department of State's 2016 Human Rights Report.

---

<sup>6</sup> Juvenile Reeducation Institute v. Paraguay, Preliminary Objections, Merits, Reparations, and Costs, Judgment, Inter-Am Ct. H.R. (ser. C) No. 112 (Sept. 2, 2004), <https://iachr.lls.edu/cases/juvenile-reeducation-institute-v-paraguay>.

<sup>7</sup> Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 2016: Paraguay, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE (2016), <http://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/humanrightsreport/index.htm?year=2016&dliid=265606>.

<sup>8</sup> Sawhoyamaya Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Merits, Reparations and Costs, Judgment, Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (ser. C) No. 146 (Mar. 29, 2006), <https://iachr.lls.edu/cases/sawhoyamaya-indigenous-community-v-paraguay>; Xákmok Kásek Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Application to the Court, Inter-Am. Comm'n H.R., Case No.12.420 (July 3, 2009), <https://iachr.lls.edu/cases/x%C3%A1kmok-k%C3%A1sek-indigenous-community-v-paraguay>; Yakye Axa Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Merits, Reparations and Costs, Judgment, Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (ser. C) No. 125 (June 17, 2005), <https://iachr.lls.edu/cases/yakye-axa-indigenous-community-v-paraguay>

<sup>9</sup> Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 2016: Paraguay, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE (2016), <http://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/humanrightsreport/index.htm?year=2016&dliid=265606>.